

Hope At Home Transitions

A Solution for Effectively Reducing Readmission Rates

It is no secret senior readmission rates for health facilities across the nation are a significant challenge. Many facilities are being heavily penalized and some risk the possible elimination of Medicare payments as a result. Recent studies have estimated the annual preventable cost for the US healthcare system to be $25 billion.

Uncertainty

- How will I get home?
- Is there food at home? Who will make my dinner?
- What did the doctor say? What medications do I need?
- When is my next appointment? How will I get there?
- When is my physical therapy starting? Is it at home?
- Who is arranging my physical therapy?
- What if I fall at home? What is the plan?

Unpredictable Results

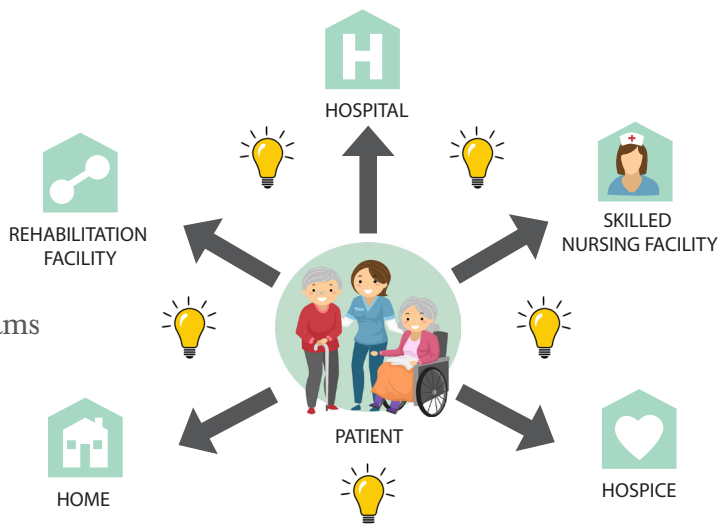

- Untrained family or neighbor caregivers
- Senior often left at home alone
- Increased reinjury rates
- Increased readmission rates
- Increased readmission costs
- Damaged reputation
- Decreased bottom line

“We have the potential of impacting one’s overall health if we can assist with social determinants, such as paying bills and having access to fresh food, much more so than what we can do through traditional medicine that occurs in clinics and hospitals. Our dilemma is that our healthcare system does not pay for such services and we continue to see patients coming back to hospitals in an acute crisis.”

“Readmissions shortly after discharge are very common and potentially preventable. No one wants to be in the hospital if they can avoid it. In addition, these readmissions are really costly to the healthcare system.” A leading health care advocate
